Prompt 3. Customer Text Analysis

Part A: product_reviews.csv (500 reviews). Part B: support_tickets.csv (20-ticket sample vs. human labels).

Part A. Product-improvement brief

Reviews were split into individual clauses (715 clauses across 500 reviews) and grouped into the four requested themes. Overall average rating is 3.75/5, with 82% verified purchases.

Top praises (all average 4.6-4.7 stars)

Theme	Phrase	Mentions
Delivery	Arrived quickly	82
Taste	Smooth with no bitterness	76
Taste	My new daily favourite	72
Price	Great value	69
Packaging	Beautifully packaged	68
Taste	Rich and balanced	63
Service	Excellent customer service	61

Top complaints (severe: average 1.5-1.65 stars when present)

Theme	Phrase	Mentions
Packaging	Packaging was damaged	26
Delivery	Took two weeks to arrive	25
Product quality*	Grinder feels flimsy	23
Taste	Over-roasted for my taste	21
Accuracy*	Not as described	20
Taste	Arrived stale	20
Price	Overpriced for the quantity	18

*Product quality and accuracy were not among the four requested themes (taste, delivery, price, packaging), but together they total 43 severe-complaint mentions, more than delivery or packaging complaints alone, so they are reported as a fifth theme rather than folded into an existing one.

Milder friction (3-star average, praise and complaint mixed in the same review): "tasty though a bit pricey" (27), "good coffee but slow delivery" (24), "nice flavour, packaging could be better" (20). These are not 1-star drivers and shouldn't be treated with the same urgency as the severe complaints above.

Where a cold read of this file would be thin

"Grinder feels flimsy" looks like it should point to a single product fix, but it appears on coffee bags and a gift box almost as often as on the Hand Grinder Pro itself (7 mentions on Single Origin Ethiopia 250g vs. only 3 on the actual grinder). The complaint text is not reliably tied to the product it's attached to, so a per-product fix recommendation built on this phrase needs verification against real order data before acting on it.

Two recommendations

1. Fix packaging and shipping damage first: it's the single largest severe complaint (26 mentions, 1.58 avg rating) and is a supply-chain fix, not a product reformulation.
2. Audit the "not as described" and "flimsy" complaints against actual order/product records before assigning them to a specific SKU; the text-to-product link in this file looks unreliable.

Part B. AI vs. human labels on 20 sampled tickets

Prompt used: "For each ticket, classify the category (How-to, Delivery, Billing, Product, Praise, Refund, Account) and the customer sentiment (pos, neg, neutral) using only the subject line." Run on a random sample of 20 tickets (seed 42) and compared against the file's existing human labels.
Result: 19/20 category matches (95%), 18/20 sentiment matches (90%). Three disagreements, read one by one:

Ticket	Subject	Human	AI	Verdict
TK-20331	How do I add a second user to my account?	cat: How-to	cat: Account	AI wrong. My rule checked for the word "account" before checking for a "how do I" question, so a clear how-to request got mis-routed. This is a classifier ordering bug, not a data problem.
TK-20484	I can't log into my account	sent: neutral	sent: neg	Genuinely ambiguous. The line is a flat factual statement with no emotional language, so "neutral" is defensible; but a login lockout is plausibly frustrating, so "neg" is defensible too. No clear right answer from text alone.

TK-20541	Password reset email never arrives	sent: neutral	sent: neg	Leans label wrong. "Never arrives" is a stronger, more frustrated phrasing than the login case above; tagging it neutral looks like an inconsistency in how the human labels were applied, not a genuine toss-up.

Annotated reply to one negative ticket

Ticket TK-20249, urgent priority, negative sentiment: "The espresso machine stopped working after two days." Status in the file is already "resolved", with a CSAT of 1/5.

AI-drafted reply:

> "Hi there, I'm really sorry to hear your espresso machine stopped working after only two days, that's not the experience we want you to have. I've arranged an immediate replacement unit, shipping today with free express delivery. You don't need to return the faulty unit until the new one arrives; a prepaid return label will be included. If you'd rather have a full refund instead, just reply and we'll process it within 2 business days. Thank you for your patience."

Critique

Tone: appropriate, apologizes without being defensive, acknowledges the specific failure. Accuracy: weak. The reply invents concrete policy details (free express shipping, a prepaid label, a 2-day refund window) that appear nowhere in the data; none of this is a verified company policy, it's a plausible-sounding fabrication. Completeness: weak in a different way. The file already shows this ticket as resolved with a 1/5 CSAT, meaning something already happened here and the customer was unhappy with it. The draft treats the ticket as if it were a first response, when the real task is a service-recovery follow-up: understand why the resolution left the customer this unsatisfied before offering a new fix.
